Nigel's commercial practice predominantly covers the fields of shipping, energy and insurance law. He appears before the Commercial and Admiralty Courts, in arbitration (both international and domestic) and before the appellate courts. He has experience of public inquiries having appeared for the government in three major shipping formal investigations.

Within his practice, much of Nigel's work is in international arbitration using the rules of the major institutions or industry organisations. He has significant experience of using relief from the national courts to support the arbitral process. Nigel accepts appointments as an arbitrator. Nigel's shipping work covers most aspects of international trade and the carriage of goods (including all forms of bill of lading and charterparty disputes); ship and yacht broking, ship management including related fraud and professional negligence claims; shipbuilding (including superyachts) and off-shore construction; ship sale and purchase; limitation and collision actions, pollution and, occasionally, Merchant Shipping Act offences

In the energy sector, Nigel's work covers both upstream and downstream aspects of the industry. He has advised on disputes relating to drilling and exploration, to production and to the sale and purchase of energy products as well as on related issues such as the enforcement of related guarantees and the insurance of drilling units. Nigel's insurance & reinsurance practice extends to policy disputes in both the non-marine and marine sectors.

Nigel has considerable experience of handling cases that are factually and technically complex with a corresponding level of documents. He is known for being approachable, and believes in working as a team with those instructing him. As well as acting for many of the major city firms, Nigel is also instructed by the Crown and often works closely with leading lawyers from other jurisdictions.
